SUNDAY HUNTERS.

To the tales a Stockton man went,
Upon ducks with a dire intent,
But the said man returned
With his face powder-burned,
And now his breech-loader's for rent.A Lodi chap started to bring
A waterfowl down on the wing,
But his hand, being large,
But his hand, being large,
He is wearing his arm in a sling.A brave hunter down at Merced
Started out with his powder and lead
To shoot game, but he
Blew the cap of his fuse,
And it bled, and it bled, and it bled.And another up at Rye Patch
Was shooting one day in a match,
But as usual, his gun
Just went off for fun,
And scared the man like the old scotch.The very best shot in Suinn
Went gunning by light of the moon,
But he climbed a high fence
And pulled his gun thence—
He won't hunt again very soon!A nimrod, also, at Tulare,
Although he was dreadful wary,
Went out to hunt on the plains,
Went out to hunt on the plains,
And hurt himself like the old Harry!Like was there was one at Ione,
Hunting bears while the spring sunshine
shone,
But now, with a harp,
In the key of C sharp,
He is whooping it up around the throne.

Thought 'twas loaded the usual way.
He pulled on the trigger—

Cunning Maine Foxes.

One morning last week, as I was crossing lots with my hound, I saw an old red fox run into a thicket. I put the dog on his track and concealed myself in the thicket, knowing that a fox will often circle and pick up his old track. I could hear the hound baying off toward New Gloucester. Then it changed and grew more and more distinct, and I knew the fox was returning. I must have waited some half an hour when I saw the fox dart into a hollow log a little distance to my left, but as he went out at the other end I remained in my hiding place, supposing it a trick of the fox to put the dog off his track. The dog was puzzled only an instant, and followed the fox on a longer circuit this time, but in the course of an hour I saw it again enter one end of the log and come out at the other. I thought, "My chap, I'll play you a Yankee trick by stopping up the further end of that log." This I did, and again hid myself, hoping for a third round. I was hidden about the same length of time, when, by the voice of my dog, I knew the fox was returning. A few minutes later I saw the fox enter the log. I ran up to the open end and soon had it secured. This being done, I awaited the coming up of the dog, which I tied to a sapling, while I went out to get an axe. I soon got back and opened the log sufficiently to see four foxes instead of one. "How was that?" It's plain enough. One fox would run until tired, then would enter the log and another would take his place.

The Colugo.

In the forests of the islands constituting the Indian Archipelago is found a curious flying animal that forms the connecting link between the lemur and the bat. The natives call it the colugo, and also the "flying fox," but it is more like a flying monkey, as the lemurs are cousins of the monkeys. Like the bats, these animals sleep in the day-time, hanging from the limbs and branches of trees, head downward; but as evening comes, they sally forth, often doing great harm to the fruit on the neighboring plantations. In some parts of Java they are so numerous that it is necessary to protect the fruit trees with huge nets. The extent of flights through the air is something astonishing. They sometimes drop to the ground and hop along with a shuffling kind of leap, but if they are alarmed, they spring to the nearest tree and in a moment reach its top by a series of bounds. Out upon the branches they dart, and with the rush are off into space. Sailing through the air like some great bird, down they go obliquely, swift as an arrow, a hundred and fifty feet or more, rising again in a graceful curve and alighting safely on a distant tree. In these great leaps they carry their young, which cling to them, or sometimes follow them in their headlong flight, uttering hoarse and piercing cries. The colugos live almost exclusively on fruit, preferring plantains and the young and tender leaves of the cocoa-palm, though some writers aver that they have been seen dart into the air and actually catch birds. The flying lemurs are perfectly harmless, and so gentle as to be easily tamed. They have lovely dark eyes and very intelligent and knowing faces.—St. Nicholas.

The Reverend Brooke Hereford, of Boston, doesn't like to be interrupted when he is busy writing a sermon, and so the other day, finding himself somewhat behindhand with his preparations for the coming Sunday, he retired to his study, giving explicit orders that he was not to be disturbed by visitors, no matter who may call. Pretty soon along came the autograph file, that is, a lady who was collecting autographs and favorite texts of Boston preachers for a charitable object. She was so importunate that Mrs. Hereford at last went to his study door and tapped. "Brooke?" "Yes?" "There's a lady down stairs—and—" "But, my dear—" "I know, Brooke, but she only wishes your autograph and favorite text, for dear charity's sake. Hereford yielded, and dashed down his name and the reference, I Timothy, v. 13, on a sheet of paper. There was a grim smile on his face as he handed it to his wife. She took it down to the visitor, and she, in turn, went away rejoicing. But when, in reviewing her treasures, she looked up Mr. Hereford's text, she read: "And without they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not."

ONE OF MORGAN'S RAIDERS.

The Story of a Mare that Saw Service in the War.

Maggie Lucas, a mare that went through three years of the hardest service of the war of the rebellion, is 34 years old. The name and tail of the hardy little animal are deeply streaked with gray. She has lost the sight of the left eye and is somewhat deaf, but she is as frisky and lively in the barnyard as most animals twenty-five years her junior. Maggie Lucas is a historical mare. She was ridden by John H. Whallen through all of the daring raids of John H. Morgan, and for three years was ridden in the courier service, the most toilsome and dangerous branch of war service. Her owner, Mr. Whallen, paid the old mare a state visit the other day and spent an hour with the recollections of the past and is resuming the almost human intimacy that once existed between the intelligent animal and himself. She was found at Mr. Miller's farm, five miles from the city, on the Eighteenth-street road, where she has been kept in ease and comfort for years, and where she will remain until death claims her gallant spirit. At first she did not recognize her old master (who was wrapped up in a heavy overcoat) and frisked away from him with the spirit of a colt, but with the heavy movement of age in her limbs. But when she was cornered and he called her name in her ear, she looked up quickly, and then recognizing the well-remembered voice, laid her head along his arm and stood gently and quietly while he patted her head and talked of the adventures they had seen together.

Mr. Whallen obtained the mare in 1862. He was at that time a boy of fourteen years and had been in the service a year. He was a courier and had many a long and rapid ride to make, but the gallant mare never was sick and seemed never to tire, going all day long in a "lope." She was in all the skirmishes and fights in Indiana and Ohio and Kentucky and was ridden away by her owner from Granville, Tenn., on the day that Morgan was betrayed and killed.

At the close of the war Mr. Whallen surrendered at Mount Sterling, and wishing to keep his mare, he left her in the country and after surrendering his arms returned to her. He was arrested, however, at Lexington, because he had not surrendered the animal and she was confiscated. He made every effort to keep trace of her, determined to buy her as soon as he made money enough. In this he was disappointed, as she was sold and he could not find her. Years passed and one day while he was standing on the river bank at Portland he saw a colored man ride his mare on the ferry-boat. He recognized her at sight and hurrying down to the boat walked up to the colored man, who was astride of her, and said:

"Uncle, you've got my horse there, sure."

"Bless your soul honey," said the old man, "I've had this mare nine years, and bought her in the blue-grass."

"Well, she used to be mine," persisted Whallen; "that is, I think it is the same mare. If it is, she won't carry double."

With this he put his hands on the mare's rump and she kicked vigorously. "And," continued Mr. Whallen, "this is her name," and he called out behind her, "Maggie." In an instant the mare whirled around, almost unseating her rider.

Mr. Whallen gave $26 and a side saddle for the mare, and used her for several years in his buggy. Then, as she got old, he sent her to the country, where he pays $80 a year board for her. For a long time he had difficulty in paying his own board, but the mare was never allowed to suffer, and he intends to keep her in comfort and ease until death ends her life.

If Maggie Lucas is alive in June she will be taken to Lexington to the reunion of Morgan's command. Nearly every soldier knew her and her boy rider well. When she dies Mr. Whallen intends to have the frame and hide preserved, and will keep them in remembrance of her faithfulness and intelligence. The funeral will be a memorial occasion, and all of Morgan's men will be invited to attend to hear the oration of some one capable of doing justice to so suggestive a theme.

A Night Run of Cattle.

Last fall a large herd of big steers for market were being driven across the country from Musselshell to Billings, on the Northern Pacific Railroad, where they were to be shipped on the cars for Chicago. There were about 2,000 head, I should judge, the property of a Mr. De Hass, a very young man. One evening a military camp had been made just ahead of the cattle, and on the same side of the creek with them, up which the herd was being driven. A storm was coming, and the cattle exhibited some signs of uneasiness. Mr. De Hass sent word to the military officer that he had better get his men horses and wagons on the opposite side of the creek and out of the way as he feared there was going to be a "night run." The herders were instructed to keep their horses saddled and be ready to mount at a moment's notice. The cattle were very uneasy, getting up, laying down and shifting about.

A last, about midnight, there came a sharp flash of lightning, followed by a heavy peal of thunder, and in an instant the whole herd were upon their feet. "Mount and whip out!" cried De Hass, and the herder who was at the head of the column drove off a few of the leading steers in the direction they were to go. All the others followed, and the herd was soon in full flight. The herders made no effort to check or control them further than to keep them going straight; they rode at the head of the column, one on each side of them swung to the right or to the left to keep the trail; bulls and precipices were avoided, and the open flat ground courted. The run lasted about two hours, when a gorge was being neared, in which the cattle would crowd and break their limbs. They were now quite tired, and the herders determined to exert their authority and stop the run. The head of the column was bent out on the prairie, and circled round and round until the cattle became tied up in a huge ball and could not move at all.

In this way they were obliged to stand until morning, the herders riding round and round them, and keeping them completely tied up. At day-break they were allowed to "open out." First, the outer edge was scattered, then layer after layer, until the huge pile of beef was a herd grazing as quietly as if nothing had happened.

Starting Country Papers.

A Minnesota exchange comes to hand with an article censuring men for embarking in the business of country journalism, and saying that the western country is being flooded with cheap patent inside newspapers, that are starving to death in some country towns on the prairies of Minnesota and Dakota. We don't know nor care what business it is of the Minnesota paper how many men swamp hundreds of dollars and wear themselves out trying to run a country newspaper in a town of one hundred and fifty inhabitants, and we doubt that anything any paper could say, would stop men from embarking in the newspaper business, in any town they choose, and running the chances of starving to death before next fall. But speaking about country newspapers, there is probably no other business that mortal man ever engaged in, that embraces such a continued round of pleasure and glad surprises as attends the establishing and conducting of a country newspaper in a small town. From the time a man feels that he has had a call to establish a newspaper in some small place, where he imagines the people are just suffering for the kind of a paper he knows he can give them, when in fact they don't want or need a paper no more than a dog needs two tails, until the time he dies or sells out to some other poor deluded wretch who wants a chunk of fame dealt out to him, his life is one grand aggregation of ups and downs, and ground and lofty tumbling that would bring most men to an early grave. There is always in every city some young man who thinks his stock of divine affluence is so large, more than he can possibly hold another minute without blowing off or exploding and killing someone, and it is often such a young man who wants to get into the newspaper business. He goes to some out of the way country town and wheedles a few of the leading business men into the idea that they need a paper to boom the place, and four or five hundred dollars is subscribed and the fun commences. A few weeks or perhaps months, until the novelty of having a paper in the new town wears off, business is good and the man thinks he has struck it rich and refuses to sell out at a fabulous price but before long a reaction sets in. His stock of energy commences to play out, the people don't worry much whether the paper comes out or not, subscribers refuse to pay or take the paper, advertising gets low, the office hands are obliged to steal wood, and stand the corner grocery off for soap for the office. The proprietor finds his bills at the stores accumulating, and getting bigger than the advertising accounts will pay. The business men of the place send away to other towns for job work, and the editor is laid up on a sick bed from the effect of a mauling he gets from some esteemed citizen, on account of an article that appeared in the paper. A draft from the house where the "patents" are printed, lies in the bank unpaid, and to save it from protest, the editor hustles around and borrows money that he don't know he will ever be able to pay. In his walks by day, he is constantly harassed by his creditors and his dreams by night are full of all manners of terrors. He wonders from week to week what he will have for the next week's issue, or how he will pay the butcher for the last liver he had for dinner. He makes a vigorous effort to be appointed postmaster of the town to give him some ready cash, but fails through the lack of political influence, runs for county clerk and is beaten by one of the old settlers out at the corners, whose wife is sick and the people want to do something to help him out. After a few years of trials and hardships of this kind, the poor man gives up in despair and sells out to some other man who never had any newspaper experience and don't know how much fun there is in the business. And so it goes. The above picture may be over drawn in some particulars, but in others it falls far below the average. But someone has got to print papers in country towns, and so we suppose there will always be men who can tell of the hardships and discouraging incidents attending the publication of a paper, in a town that cannot support it. It is no use for the Minnesota editor to attempt to stop the increase in the number of papers in small western towns, because the country is full of men with an itch for scribbling, or broken down ministers, lawyers, doctors, and school-teachers, who take up journalism as a last feeble effort, and they usually find their way into just such places. But after all is said, any man who ever started a newspaper in a small town, will swear that so long as he could keep out of the poor house he had more fun than you could shake a stick at.—Peck's Sun.

"I really was puzzled what to do," said our own Mrs. Ramsbottom, "I was quite on the horns of a 'duenna,' as the saying is."

Rough on Rats.

Ask druggists for "Rough on Rats." It clears out rats, mice, bed bugs, roaches, vermin, flies, ants, insects. 15c. per box.

CLEAN AND EXPLICIT

That any indebtedness incurred during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, cannot be paid from the funds of the present or of any subsequent fiscal year, and that even the assent of two-thirds of the electors would not authorize such payment. This view of the Constitution is not only obvious in itself, but has recently been sustained by a decision of the SUPREME COURT.

From which there is no appeal, in the case of the San Francisco Gaslight Company vs. Auditor Brickwedel, for that effect. The gas company had claims against the city of San Francisco, and wanted auditor Brickwedel to issue warrants for the same; he refused, because the gas had been furnished during a preceding fiscal year, and should have been paid for with the funds collected and due that year. The company brought the matter before the Supreme Court for the purpose of compelling the auditor to issue the warrants. The Supreme Court decided that the auditor had no right to issue any warrants, or approve any bill for a preceding year. Hence San Francisco has a precedent.

GO WITHOUT STREET LIGHTS.

Until June 30th next an experience which will teach future Boards of Supervisors to keep the expenditures of the city within its income. The decision covers the case of this county, as completely as it does that of San Francisco. Whatever the necessity may be, no more than $3,000 is available to carry on the county business for the fiscal year terminating June 30, 1883. Until then

NO ROAD WORK CAN BE DONE,

And it will be a different problem to so manage as to feed the prisoners in jail, pay salaries and other seemingly necessary expenses. But more than this: it compels the county to permanently refuse the payment of a debt for which value has unquestionably been received. The only conclusion seems to be that we are not alone in this humiliating misfortune; nearly every county in the State is in the same fix. If any one can devise any manner in which the present debt of about $74,000 incurred as above, can be legally and constitutionally paid, he would be a public benefactor, inasmuch as the error was quite unintentional on the part of the officials. When the first county government bill was declared unconstitutional, the Supervisors reverted to the plan previously in use of paying out money for back debts, warrants are thus paid as registered, the tail or oldest being paid first. All this is now

STOPPED WITH A JERK!

And there are now two questions to be settled. They are: (1) How can the current business of the county for the fiscal year be carried on, $37,000 being needed for the purpose? (2) What is to be done with creditors of the county who have warrants on its Treasury given for services rendered or supplies furnished during the fiscal year ending

SANTA CLARA EMBARRASSED.

A Lack of Funds the Cause of Great Walling and Gnashing of Teeth.

We have on two or three occasions heretofore called attention to the objectionable policy of running the county business on a personal credit, by paying the indebtedness of a previous year from the taxes of the current year, and then running the current year's business on credit, to be paid in like manner the year following. For the bonded indebtedness we are mainly indebted to the attack of

"RAILROAD ON THE BRAIN"

With which the State generally was afflicted some years ago, but from which the recovery has been complete except in the region of the pocket. There is, however, no legal difficulty in meeting the liability thus incurred. With the floating debt the case is different. We have opposed the whole debt policy on general principles, applying both to public and private business, a departure from which has never failed to bring disaster even when seemingly desirable. But it is with regret that we note that a compulsory and immediate termination of this policy threatens great injustice to persons who in good faith honestly purchased county warrants, and thus supplied the means for carrying on the county business. To explain the present condition of the county funds as regards the floating debt and current expense, we will commence with the

The shooting match at San Bruno last Sunday, between Robinson and Lambert, for a purse of $500, resulted in a victory for Lambert. Great dissatisfaction was manifested at the result, and it was strongly hinted that Robinson had played his friends false. Of course this is mere conjecture, and it is quite natural for the losers to attribute their loss to unfair motives.

Chamberlain & Wilcox have just received a large and varied spring stock of goods.

Her Blood Purifier will do more to cleanse the channels of the circulation and purify the life of the body than all the sanitary devices of the Board of Health.

"Twill ever your cold Ammen's Cough Syrup.

We had a friend say to us a few days ago, "I never do anything for a cold; just wear it off." That is exceedingly dangerous; one might do that 10 times and the 20th time the cold would settle on the lungs and lead to consumption, and thus cut one's life short many years. Is it not better, and more sensible, to go to your druggist and get a bottle of Ammen's Cough Syrup than run any risk at all.

One erience from Many Years.

I have been sick and miserable so long and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, I was weary, nervous, disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve, and I was glad that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said, "Hop Bitters for Hop Bitters, long may you prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—The Mother.

JIMMY PEACE'S STORY.

A Few Exceptions Taken to James Meadows' Ideas of Early Days.

ED. TIMES AND GAZETTE: In your issue of March 17th, 1883, an article appeared headed, "A Different Person," taken from the Santa Cruz Sentinel. In the article exceptions are taken to your former version of a biographical sketch of James Peace's residence on the Pacific coast. Now who this James Meadows is or where he lived at that time does not appear, but if he had been a resident of this country at that time he must have been one of about 80 who were corralled and taken to Monterey by the Mexican soldiers from all parts of the country. Some were released, and upon the appearance of Farnum with a United States war vessel, who hearing of what was going on immediately demanded our release, or that we should be taken to Mexico. He told us to have no fears, that he would secure our release and the return of our property, which had been confiscated or rather stolen by the Mexicans.

Forty-eight of us were placed on board a vessel, and shackled to long bars on either side, and placed in the hold of the ship without blankets, and with planks for beds. I succeeded in getting all the shackles off from them and made an effort to take the vessel, but being without any arms, we hesitated to face the guard. We were next taken to Santa Barbara and sent ashore; we remained there about four days and from there were moved to San Blas, Mexico, and thence to Tepic, inland where we remained as prisoners some eight months or more, when we were finally released. But little nothing of our property was ever returned to us or to be found. Herds of horses, cattle, sheep, tools, furniture, etc., everything was gone, not even our blankets were returned to us. Had Meadows been one of those men I should certainly have known him, and if one of those released at Monterey Farnum has his name. I think Meadows must be more indebted to his memory of what he has been told since than to facts of what he himself was an eye witness of. As to my arriving here in 1836, it was very many, many years before that time that the Nereid arrived on this coast. She stopped for repairs at Monterey, thence sailed to the various trading posts of the Hudson Bay Company, and north even as far as Sitka. I remained on Board about four years, and upon her return south she made her first trip to San Francisco Bay. Neither McLaughlin or Ray were passengers; both of whom I was well acquainted with. Mr. Ray was born at the same place that I was, St.romedius, Kingdom of Sicily, and we attended school together. Upon our arrival in San Francisco Bay, there was neither house man or vessel to be seen—the hills around the bay were called Yerba Buena from the yerba of that name growing abundantly thereon.

Our object there was to trade for hides but finding none nearer than the Mission Dolores, some three miles distant, the vessel sailed north again, and I determined to remain aboard no longer and left the vessel. As to my being born in 1818, well, I guess I ought to know something about that as I was there. Many years before that I was in the ship Neptune, a whaler, and cruised in the ice, in the north Atlantic ocean, was shipwrecked and drifted in an open boat for three weeks before being picked up. I have neither time, opportunity or inclination to keep much of a diary except in my head but have met all the old settlers often and there were but three white foreigners in Alta California before myself—not one of which or their sons are now living. I am now more interested in looking after something to live upon than I am of what has been, and I find many of my people whom I have assisted and protected when the white people first came here will hardly let me live now in peace and by my own labor.

Hope for Drunkards.

My husband had drunken habits he could not overcome until Parker's Ginger Tonic took away his thirst for the good things claimed for it.

Our little daughter had been sick all the time, and suffered much pain instantly. We used it for a sore lip on the baby which was covered with sores; it performed a cure in two or three days. It is pleasant to apply on the face or any part of the body and has not the greasy nasty smell of other salves. A party at Purisima of our acquaintance was bitten by a dog on the thigh and in the hand.

He bought a box of Mother Cary's Salve of Messrs. Rohde & Co., of Purisima, storekeepers there and cured the wounds in one week. Messrs. Rohde & Co. will testify to this.

It will cure any sore, cut, burn or wound it may be applied to, and for poison oak it is equally good.

For the piles it is invaluable. Try it. Price, only 25 cents.
